

There is never a need to excuse your successes. But when successes abound there is a distinct lack of excuses and yes it does depend on which side you are on. Even in competition the winners are devoid of excuses and the losers? We there is no need to go further down there. In all my years in industry I can say that never listened to excuses enough to be interested; until I started writing this book. And now I realize that excuses are the reasoning of insecure minds that are unable to admit to being either wrong or beaten in something. Whether excuses work with failure or not is frankly obvious because none of us wish to be associated with failure which by definition means we should never commit to excuses.
