ABOUT THE SERIES The lost man chronicles is a modern day testament to one mans journey to become re-immersed in a world which has been lost in the glare of modern convenience and commercial contrivances. Each passage explores a passage toward enlightenment, toward awareness, and ultimately toward rediscovering the meaning of life. Simple to read and easy to understand, the lost man chronicles is accessible to all. Yet, as facile each passage is to comprehend, as a whole, the work is bound to have profound impact on those who read it. from book 1, the art of living losing thy self i am a man who has lost his self. one no longer amongst all the others, but an entity which is one with the world. amalgamated into this universal wonder i am apt to wander through like a molecule brushing up against others, floating, swirling, lingering when i am cold, frantic when i am not. sometimes, from a distance, i may seem indistinguishable, but look a little closer and, and youll discover im unique. in my purest form i am energy. but when i use my self through mortal toil i am apt to waste both time and space, to channel my self through and towards no means necessary, to err merely for the sake of escaping ennui. this is why i have lost my self. because i want to know me, i want to know purity, the untainted possibilities of being nothing, yet everything, again. the less there is of you, the more you experience the sublime. Joseph Campbell
